

GOOD NEIGHBOR CERTIFICATION PROGRAM

For Field Personnel

The Goal

Industry field personnel are uniquely qualified to be Good Neighbor Ambassadors representing the energy and extraction industries in host communities.

The Strategy

Create a Good Neighbor Certification program for field personnel that not only empowers employees, but even more, qualifies companies to become Good Neighbor certified companies. Our members agree this program is good for business and good for communities.

The Training

- increases awareness about Community Counts and how our response line works
- discusses typical complaints we receive and ideas to mitigate impacts
- talks about the Good Neighbor Pledge that member companies have committed to honoring
- discusses conflict strategies and decision making in the field
- shares facts about current industry technology

The Benefits

- energy member companies and field personnel have an opportunity to build a good reputation and increase their client base
- government officials and regulators appreciate having issues quickly addressed and resolved
- residents appreciate seeing courteous drivers and field personnel who are helpful and sensitive to impacts and working to mitigate those impacts as best they can

COMMUNITY COUNTS

CONNECTING ENERGY AND THE COMMUNITY

MEMBERSHIP APPLICATION

As a company that has been in the oil and gas industry for ten years, we value the support and partnership that we gain from Community Counts. With their help, our community feels that they have a voice and are being heard when there is a problem. The communities' concerns are taken very seriously, and Community Counts will interact with the contractors working in the area to notify them of the issues that need to be addressed immediately. We appreciate Community Counts and their services in helping us all to build a stronger economy.

Community Counts is so cool, so very unique. It provides an organization based on the vision of its founders to provide direct communication between our residents and the energy producers. Western Colorado is the envy of other energy impacted regions throughout the state! Community Counts has made an impact on the relationships between the energy companies, the land holder, the mineral rights holder, and the community. Gee, they are all talking, even waving, to each other. If anybody has a concern, shucks, just call the 800 number and they're on it. What a wonderful concept ... people talking to each other.

Community Counts is a great way to let local contractors know about training programs that can help their employees become safer and more efficient in their jobs. Colorado Mountain College is always happy to partner with organizations that can help us develop our career and technical education programs.

Two very important needs within conservation and agriculture are information and partnerships. I find that whether I am working at State, watershed, or local levels, Community Counts is an organization I know I can turn to for information, and be assured that if they don't have an answer, they can turn to one of their many partners to get me the information in a timely fashion.
